Stone Creek Golf Club

Stone Creek Golf Club was designed on 160 acres of beautifully rolling land just east of Portland, Oregon. Some of the natural features of the site include large open meadows, tall stands of fir trees, meandering streams and wetlands, and dramatic elevation changes. This daily fee golf course plays to a par of 72 and approaches 6900 yards.

The challenge put before the Jacobsen Hardy design team was to incorporate 18-holes of golf, and related facilities, with 20 large residential lots (providing golf course views from each), while meeting the economic goals of the developers. Jacobsen Hardy Golf Course Design achieved this by creating a “core style” golf course that utilized the existing site characteristics to capture an enjoyable golfing experience; thus, meeting the developers goals. The housing was strategically located along an existing ridge, which allowed for views of the entire property, as well as of majestic Mt. Hood in the distance.

What made Stone Creek truly unique, however, was the business venture between the County Government of Clackamas and a private development group, which made the project possible. The private developers were able to develop the golf course on County owned land with some County financial participation. Essentially, the developers were presented with an opportunity to develop the course without any land costs, with the option of long term ownership in the course or a profitable pre-arranged buy out. This business model solved several problems for the County and afforded the County private sector equity financing and private development expertise which they did not have in-house.

With two challenging and exciting nines, a spacious double-ended practice range, and two practice greens, Stone Creek Golf Club is sure to be a favorite of Portland residents.
